JUDGMENTS

tion to the proposal of penalising pitchers for hitting a batsman heavier than the present rule of giving the batsman one base. Some who advocate a change would give the batsman two or even three bases and when the evil effects of hitting batsmen are considered this penalty does not seem too severe. It would certainly make pitchers more careful, and ber of the home team who has a batting by so doing would contribute vastly to the average above the 200 mark. Cadman and interest of the game also, for if one thing Rigg above all others destroys the interest in Rigg base ball it is wild pitching; moreover it | week destroys the system of teamwork by put- since ting a team "up in the air." But it is argued that such a heavy penalty might invite players to get hit. Not if the pitcher is speedy and the umpire onto his job. Any player who purposely stepped into an easy one could readily be called out, while the man who would walk into a out, while the man who would walk into a swift one woud get put out another way Then it may be argued that sould not Beal would be unjust where pitchers could not be a second not be unjust where pitchers could not be unjust where the pitchers could not be unjust where pitchers could not be unjust where pitchers could not be unjust where the pitchers could no Then it may be argued that such a penalty avoid wildness. By the same token, then, it is unjust to give a batsman one base as at present. But as a matter of fact a Beid beavier penalty would not be unjust; it Har would simply make the average pitcher do what he is capable of doing-pitching with better control. It would greatly enhance the interest of the game. Too many good ball players have been put out or ruined by wild pitches, and many a man, once Cob badly hurt, never recovers his nerve sufficiently to enable him to bat as effectively as before. It is foul work and anything calculated to do away with it in part or in whole ought certainly be worth the Wie trial.

"Why is it," we have been asked, "you do not roast the team and make it play better, and roast Pa Rourke and make him get some new players?" For several reasons, the first of which is, it is not our business to roast. Next, it would be a waste of fuel, for Pa Rourke, whose gate receipts rise and fall with the rise and fall of his team's standing, probably cannot get better players, or he would. And in the we next place it would be an unjust and unwarranted attack on the players. The Hol biamed cause his best is no better than it is not his fault he is on the team. Roasting, manifestly, could not make Cassidy, Denver ..... him a better player. Then, in the last Frambes, St. Joseph place, a player's playing is his record, and his record is his stock in trade, and no- Mattick. Des Moines his record is his stock in trade, and nobody has a right to degrade that. He does an irreparable injury to the player who attempts it, and the chances nine times out of ten are that he goes too far in his roasting—he does not keep within the facts. In his eagerness to "roast" he makes the player out worse than he is, and when he does that he steals a part of the player's stock in trade, or, as an eminent author once put it, "fliches from me my good name," and neither the roaster nor the player is able to repair the fliching. Those player is able to repair the fliching. Those are some of the reasons we are boosting instead of knocking. Confidentially, we might observe that the army of knockers seems to be already over recruited.

Perring stald with Cleveland several years, but all the time on the ragged edge and finally fell overboard for the same reason. Autrey had two golden chances with Cincinnati and Boston, playing first like a flend, but falling down at the bat, he dropped back to the American association and now Red Fisher has dropped by degrees-from St. Louis to Louisville, to Denver-back to the Western league. Fisher, as matter of fact, never left Hedges' ownership, for the St. Louis Brown's magnate also controls Louisville.

It seems to us that if the best team in the league wine the pennant this year the flow will float from a Denver staff next on. Stoux City is a close second, but Sloux City has no right to heat Denver , unless it be due to a slight advantage in the league is between Omaha and St. Josuph to top the second division.

The letter "D" has been as great a rabbit foot to the New York Giants as "B" once was a hoodoo to the Boston Nationals, when at times eight players whose names began with the second letter would be in the Dove's lineup. In Outfielder Riggert Pa Rourke seems to have struck a real ball player. He fields his position well, hits timely and consistently and is very fast on the bases. He was badly needed in Omaha.

Halibut Chase, the marvel of first basemen, is again increasing his value to the Highlanders by laying off. Sore head or
